FARM Talk — The Origin of the State Fair in America

While the months of August and September are usually associated with heading back to school, many states nationwide will also celebrate the end of summer by holding state and county fairs. First held in the early 19th century, fairs have developed from expositions of agriculture and technology into a 21st century American pastime.

The Roots of the American Fair. Like many words in the English language, the word "fair" can be traced back to Latin roots. Most likely taken from the Latin feria, which means "holy day," the earliest fairs were days marked for leisure and religious celebration. Thought to have begun in the Roman Empire, the feriae were a series of religious days that were acknowledged and funded by the government. These public holidays often consisted of games, competitions, and other festivities.

By the Middle Ages, the Roman feriae had evolved into a venue for foreign merchants to not only gather together, but also buy, sell, and trade their goods with the public. These fairs combined the historic festivities with temporary markets, and were often tied in with a Christian religious day, such as a Saint's Feast Day, and held at local parishes. The combination of commerce, religion, and festivities became the hallmark of Medieval fairs, which remained popular for several centuries.

The First American State Fair. As time passed, fairs moved away from their early religious associations, and began to focus more on agriculture, competition, and education. In the US, agricultural fairs did not begin to catch on until the early 19th century, when the first American fair was held in Pittsfield, Massachusetts. This early fair, organized by Elkanah Watson in 1807, was a small affair consisting of only sheep shearing demonstrations.

At Watson's urging, other area farmers began to showcase their livestock at public gatherings, where they were then judged and awarded for the quality of their animals. Watson further developed his vision of what would become county fairs over the years, later including activities for men, women, and children, and allowing merchants to sell goods at the event.

Watson's ideas quickly spread, and many small rural communities began holding their own versions of fairs throughout states in the Northeast and Midwest. By the mid 19th century, these gatherings had gained enough popularity that the state of New York organized the first State Fair at Syracuse, NY in 1841. The first American State Fair was held for two days in September, and focused on educating attendees about agriculture, featuring animal exhibits and speeches.

In addition to educating fairgoers, New York's fair also featured samples and products for both farms and homes, again mixing the agricultural education and commerce that would come to define American fairs. The first fair was a great success, drawing in between 10,000 and 15,000 people. Today, The New York State fair is still one of the most popular events in the country, lasting for nearly two weeks before ending on Labor Day.

WHO SHOULD YOU NOMINATE?

Teachers who promote civic responsibility, flag etiquette and patriotism are prime candidates for the award.

HOW DO I SUBMIT A NOMINATION?

Step 1: In 350 words or less, describe why you feel your nominee is deserving of the award. Be sure to describe the teacher's innovative teaching and resource development methods, as well as his or her dedication to education.
